condition that France should lend her energies to the aid of the appealing nations.

Allow me to forewarn you against attributing any impulse of the military spirit and of conquest to this opinion as to the intervention of France in the affairs of other nations. In your grand Republic you have an entirely opposite maxim of State, but, true as it is for you, it would be equally false for us. The very reasons which prescribe for you non-interference render it necessary that the foreign policy of France should be intervention. It is our duty toward the oppressed, it is our right in the name of liberty, and of the principles we represent, and finally, it is our interest, for our own safety is at stake. If the Revolution does not trumph in Europe, we shall be anew assailed umph in Europe, we shall be anew assailed and invaded. And it is no longer the emigres at Collentz who desire this, but the new refugees at Brussels and London; it the men of the wealthy middle class from Paris. This is a fact full of alarm. Here millions of trancs granted to the refugees of the paris, if the invasion, is not actually de-

Let me repeat the cause of this defec-tion on the part of our old Republicans, for it worth repeating. I recur to the Exlitics. While in all other quarters business is languishing, while laborers are dying of hunger for want of work, the movement of the Exchange is full of ardor. It seems as if all industrial activity were crowded there. Never has the financial feudalism done a more stirring business or made fatter profits. It speculates in the universal truin. It takes advantage of the misery of those who are forced in order to seem the control of the co Refer at master of the fillowing lines are private or hence, as the case may had piece of the reference of the fillowing lines are private or hence, as the case may had piece of the private of the priv

Paris, March 29, 1849.

To the Editor of the N. Y. Tribune:

I write under the impression of the shame and sorrow in which all those are to-day plunged who have the true sentiment of libserty and of the work commenced by the French revolution. Italy has fallen—or rather, one of the principal branches of that grand nationality now seeking to assume a united, organic form; and France, deaf to this last of the many warnings of Providence received during the past thirteen months—France, governed by the heir of Napoleon—does no more than record as a foreseen fact accomplished, what Lord Aberdeen prophecied a week since in the British Parliament. In '93 the new principle first triumphed in France over foreign violence; deat other countries; 1814 and '15 saw our ambition chastised, and a severe lesson bestowed on France, intoxicated with glory, and forgetful of her domestic interests and duties; then followed a period in which liberal principles germinated and took root through the very hostility with which their extinction was attempted; in 1830 France herself awoke, and a first ray of hope fell upon Europe—a hope of which the siege of Antwerp and the occupation of Ancona were pledges. But 1848 was indeed the day of waking and emancipation for the entire Continent though upon one condition! on the condition that France should lend her energies to the aid of the appealing nations.

Proudhon has just been condemned by the court, but gains the case before the tribunal of the people. A single cause of anxiety disturbs this triumph of popularity. It is feared that the Bank of the People cannot be organized with a manager in prison. Proudhon this morning called together the principal stockholders and the twelve Committees of the Arrondissements. He gathered their views, but has not yet decided.
The universal opinion was that above all things the enterprise ought not to suffer interruption. I hope that Proudhon will think and act accordingly, and at any rate I can assure you that the Bank will go on. It is now organizing seventeen new Industrial
